Sai Yok National Park Kanchanaburi, Thailand

Sai Yok National Park was established in 1980 and it is located in Amphur Thongphaphum and Amphur Sai Yok, Kanchanaburi Province. The park covers an area of 958km² near the Myanmar's south eastern border with Thailand. Sai Yok National Park has a very long history, during World War II, Japanese troops forced Allied Prisoners of War to build the notorious railway to Burma through this area. Much evidence remains available for historical study. Sai Yok area is well known for bats because there are many hills and caves within the parks. One of the species of bat found only in the limestone caves in this area is called the Kitti's hog-nosed Bat. It is the world's smallest mammals, weighting only 2g discovered by Mr Kitti Thonglongya in October 1973 in a cave near Sai Yok Waterfall.

The area within Sai Yok National Park is a complex limestone mountain supporting moist evergreen forest, mixed deciduous forest, and bamboo. The park is the habitat of large animals such as Elephant, Gaur, Sambar Deer, and Tiger. There are also smallest mammals in the worlds, Kitti's Hog-Nose Bat and the recently discovered Regal Crab, both of which are endemic species.

Sai Yok Noi Waterfall drops directly into the Kwai Noi River. It is about 10m high. Near by is the Sai Yok Lek Waterfall with similar, but smaller characteristics. Both waterfalls flow all year round even during the dry season that the waterfall will appear even higher due to the low river water level of Kwai Noi. The park has built a bridge across the river in order to conveniently view the waterfalls and river.

River Kwai comprises of two rivers that have been well recognized as the Kwai Noi and the Kwai Yai River meaning Big Kwai and Small Kwai River. The river is well known for her WWII historical value i.e. the "Bridge Over River Kwai" and the "Death Railway" which was laid adjacent to the river and cut across the Sai Yok jungle to the Burmese border. We will be taking the actual Death Railway Train ride from River Kwai Bridge to the mid-station at Krasae (1 1/2 hrs journey).
